

RATIONALLY ENRAGED

by Franziska Brozio

SYNOPSIS

The filmmaker follows three very different activists and attempts to adopt their perspectives. Along the way, leading behavioural scientists sharpen her awareness of her own subjectivity. While Yannick campaigns doggedly for a more decisive climate policy and Nina refuses to keep accepting the humiliation of her poverty, Martin sees the most pressing social problem in the one-sidedness of current media coverage. All of them are angry; all three are committed to change. The filmmaker tries to listen to all three in equal measure and to understand what drives them. Although she makes no secret of her own position, the protagonists let the film team share in their everyday lives and follow their efforts. Again and again, the film seeks to get to the bottom of the communication problems between them and their opponents.
