

ICH BIN CREATIVE

by Edward Longmire

SYNOPSIS

Creativity. What is it? A bird? An aeroplane? An addiction? None of the above. It's a condition. And it can control you. Berlin has long been mooted as the coolest city on the planet. For generations, artists and frustrated artists have come here to find their voice and swap the creative energy that abounds on the streets. But is it as easy as people would have you believe to live and work in Berlin? For every success and career and breakthrough, there has to be a supreme effort on the part of the artist to make it happen. And it is on this struggle that the documentary focuses. A cross-section of the Berlin art scene was selected: criteria for selection was based on the subject's accessibility, and the extent to which their work reflected the Berlin of the new millennium. After shooting for most of the second half of 2010, Edward returned in the fall of 2011 for further shooting, exploring how each character's timeline had developed. He also took note of the accelerating...
