

THE GREAT FALLACY

by Dirk Heth, Olaf Winkler

SYNOPSIS

While searching for a new film project, a cameraman stumbles upon a peculiar point of view: the “market value of human beings.” Spurred on by curiosity, he follows the dilemma of three women with a marginal “market value,” as well as two politicians who are fighting their way through bureaucratic windmills in their search for pragmatic solutions. The cameraman believes to have found a vision which could change society. But by now, he has become afflicted himself and finds himself confronted with one of life’s great fallacies... A cinematic travelogue through five years in Germany - a time capsule addressed to the cameraman’s children to open one day as adults.
