

THE LAST HOUSE

by Anna Kindermann

SYNOPSIS

The film shows three men who gather to face death although they have their feet firmly on the ground. In garages and workshops they become craftsmen of their own coffins. In between wooden plates and saw dust they work, joke and remain silent. The intimate meetings and conversations about the present condition as well as sensing their own finitude, connects them like brothers. While the 'box' is taking on the role of a guide, helping them to reach for more through the awareness of the end, the men resign from their personal histories. A film on male communication and an emotional subject.
